Abstract

Journalism is an industry, a media business. Myth and mythology are the world's oldest form of storytelling, the recounting of a story. This is also the fundamental purpose of the media, who, while carrying out their business, create modern “monomyth” narratives. This research examines the creation of heroes by the media and how these heroes are portrayed to the public.

This work involved carrying out content analysis of the term ‘hero’ in broadsheets and tabloids from three countries: (i) USA: The New York Times, National Enquirer; (ii) BRAZIL: Folha de São Paulo, Meia Hora and (iii) IRELAND: The Irish Times, The Irish Daily Star. A four-month period of all print editions of the newspapers were studied, from 1st February 2018 to 31st May 2018. The research questions included: 1. Does the world currently need heroes? 2. How does the media industry describe heroes? 3. What does it take to be a hero? 4. What image of a hero does the media portray? 5. Can MSM (mainstream media) be trusted? 6. Do the results reflect the beliefs of the media and/ or current society?

The research questions above were analysed using the results of the content analysis. It was found that the newspapers in Ireland had the most frequent occurrences of the term hero, followed by those of Brazil and USA, who each had a significantly lower frequency and were more discerning in who they classified as heroes to their audience. Based on this analysis, it was determined that the portrayal of heroes by the media is influenced by the current social, political, structural, economic, geographic and cultural climate of a country. It was surmised that political polarization in USA and Brazil is one factor that leads to less frequent use of heroes in news reports in those countries. Also, global issues are affecting and impacting on views as well.

On this basis, it is recommended that, when portraying a hero, the media should assign value to the word. Content should be delivered that has accurate information, and not distract the audience by referring to a heroic sportsperson, politician, animal, fictional character or object. Further research could be undertaken to identify and analyse other, more subtle terms that the media use to characterise heroes, for example legend. Additionally, factors could be studied that would be helpful for the news industry to bear in mind when selecting the approach to this matter.

Acknowledgments

Firstly, I would like to thank my supervisor Conor Kostick for sharing his knowledge, being patient, and giving me direction when facing conflicts.

Additionally, I would like to thank the faculty of Journalism and Media Communications in Griffith College, especially Caroline Connolly, for all the academic support, professionalism and respect. In addition, I would like to thank all of the faculty lecturers, who strive to share knowledge without segregation: Bernadette O'Sullivan; Francesca Lalor; Madeleine Jordan; Siobhán Gaffney; Barry Finnegan; Niall Meehan; Robby Smith; Brian Maye; Ronan Brady (all my admiration); Pat Proctor; Stephen O'Leary and Ryan Brennan.

I would like to thank the person who was closest to me during this journey, Tiernan O'Shea, thank you for being a very good partner.

I greatly thank the Cox Family, you are a gift in my life.

I would also like to thank the company that I work for, for all the understanding and adjustments of shifts when I could not be present: Dealz Liffey Street, my manager David Bates, his managers and all my colleagues, thank you very much.

I register a special thanks to The Irish Daily Star's editor-in-chief Eoin Brannigan for permitting me to use their archive and for understanding my research. To Mr. Rory for his help with the system and to all his staff, thank you.

I thank all those who believed and made me a stronger person. I will not be able to list all the names, but I would like to thank you for participating directly or indirectly in the trajectory of this life work.

Chapter 1: Introduction

Journalism is an industry, a media business. Myth and mythology are the world's oldest form of storytelling, the recounting of a story. This is also the fundamental purpose of the media, who while carrying out their business, at times portray subjects as modern-day heroes to their audience.

This dissertation studies the invention of the hero in modern myth-making in times of intolerance i.e. against the backdrop of today's world of political polarization and global issues, where the ability to identify can be affected by language, skin colour, gender, religion or historical ties. Time's up. Time to observe the international limelight.

The newspaper articles of a broadsheet and a tabloid in three countries over a four-month period were analysed to find the prevalence and type of heroes that are described in each. The countries chosen were USA, Brazil and Ireland. In this way, the processes that the media use to invent heroes and influence the public could be examined, where it was seen that the marketplace and the power of the media play a very important role in reshaping preferences. Controversial, provocative, informative and relevant articles were analysed in this research, because sometimes 'media heroes' may not be true heroes in the eyes of all readers.

This material was used to analyse the past and today's world and examine how the connection between the two is used by the media to create "monomyth" narratives. "Myth is much more important and true than history. History is just journalism and you know how reliable that is." (Campbell, 1987).

As explained by Stefanie Schult (Schult, 2017), the term “monomyth” appeared for the first time in James Joyce's Finnegan's Wake and was adopted by Joseph Campbell in his study of myth. In Campbell's The Hero with a Thousand Faces (1949), Campbell uses the term “monomyth” to refer to the traditional tale of the hero, in which a hero answers a call to adventure and goes on a quest. Beating temptation and overcoming all odds, the hero emerges victorious. Such traditionally heroic stories can be found throughout human history and include Cú Chulainn, Beowulf, King Arthur's Tale, Christ's Journey and Hercules (Busha, 2017).

Important questions remain in today's society relating to the role of the media, which this work aims to address: What influence does the media exert? What exactly is meaning and how does the audience interpret received messages from the media? Can technology empower an individual? Who are the ones that receive global media attention? Is there an example of the lack of balance in international news coverage? Who led to an international media frenzy? Which events received little, if any, airtime or column inches? The examples run on and on but these questions remain in the media landscape. Action, reaction and consequences are leading to a groundbreaking re-assessment of the place and the role of the media.

Furthermore, this research examines the current state of the media industry to provide context in understanding its depiction of the hero. Currently, news outlets are competing with each other and with big tech organisations that distribute news across multiple platforms. This market competition can lead to the proliferation of fake news and misinformation, as outlets struggle to gain readership. The way that the media fund their activities is through financing by the public, when they buy printed newspapers, subscribe online, read or download content in mobile applications, online-only websites, or through television and radio. Free access, free data sometimes. However, there is a danger that the number of accurate news outlets will decrease. According to The Guardian newspaper, 55% of adults use the world web wide to read the news and the speed with which this information reaches its audience is instant, unlike print media (<https://www.theguardian.com/media/2013/aug/08/half-britons-access-news-online>). The audience is always on, participative, active, quick to jump to conclusions and share content. Due to the importance of this fact in understanding the invention of the hero in modern myth-making, chapter two of this thesis examines the meaning of language using communication theory and cultural studies, which are deeply influenced by cultural sociologist Stuart Hall and his communication reception theory. Chapter two also provides a detailed literature review. It examines how heroes are portrayed by the Irish, Brazilian and American media, alongside a summary of the literature that was analysed during the research.

Chapter three explains the methodology used to carry out this research. Chapter four highlights the findings and analyses of this study and lastly, chapter five describes the conclusion and recommendations of this work.

Chapter 2: Literature Review

2.1 Introduction

Truth and lies reported by mainstream media are part of the fabric of today's global world, which is heavily influenced by digital mass media (Benkler, 2006; Jenkins et al., 2013; Lessig, 2008). Technology has even led to what some commentators fear could be a digital zombie social epidemic by a generation shaped by technology, referred to as Generation Z (Parnell, 2017). This dissertation aims to provoke a debate about how the media has been working to invent heroes and anti-heroes in today's journalism. This modern myth making may not always be justified. As George Orwell stated in his novel 1984: "In the face of pain there are no heroes." (George Orwell, 2008, part 3, chapter 1).

In this vein, it has been decided to investigate and offer a conceptual framework to examine the Invention of the Hero in Modern Myth Making (In Times of Intolerance). Contemporary discussions of mass media using social theory/ cultural reflexivity (Pels, D.2003) are presented. Reflexivity refers to a theory in the social sciences, where the personality or presence of the researcher themselves on what is being investigated is taken into account.

This research project interprets the complexity of modern myth-making using a variety of assessment theories, by contextualizing the works of authors, journalists, politicians, marketers and producers. In addition, the views of society are examined through content analysis research.

2.2 Mythology and Modern Myth Making

There are many examples of traditional heroes in mythology. These heroes can be portrayed as warriors, as lovers or as the super-heroic and can be found in the mythology of ancient peoples such as the Greeks, the Romans, the Vikings, the Teutons and the Celts. As outlined by T. W. Rolleston (1986) in Celtic Myths and Legends, the mythology of the Celts contains many striking tales of imagination and romance, with heroes and heroines, giants and maidens, battles and brave deeds. Mythological stories are manifestations of psychological, cultural or societal truths and are frequently fables that help convey belonging, shared and religious experiences, behavioural models and moral and practical lessons. As Joseph Campbell states in The Masks of God: Occidental Mythology:

“In the context of traditional mythology, the symbols are presented in socially maintained rites, through which the individual is required to experience, or will pretend to have experienced, certain insights, sentiments and commitments” (Campbell, 1991, p. 4).

Myths are a way of telling stories that are connected to power, politics and economic interests. Conrad Hyers declares that “myth today has come to have negative connotations, myths are storied vehicles of supreme truth, the most basic and important truths of all. By them people regulate and interpret their lives and find worth and purpose in their existence. Myths put one in touch with sacred realities, the fundamental sources of being, power, and truth. They are seen not only as being the opposite of error but also as being clearly distinguishable from stories told for entertainment and from the workaday, domestic, practical language of a people” (Hyers, 1984, p.107).

Considering these statements, it is observed that the basis of modern myth making is rooted in the mythological tradition. Many contemporary studies rely on ancient myths to construct narratives. For example, the Disney Corporation can be known to re-invent traditional childhood myths. Modern narrative myths such as urban legends prove that myth making continues. Myth making is not a collection of stories fixed to a remote time and place, but an ongoing social practice within every society (Greenring, 2017).

2.3 Mainstream Media

This research project highlights the ability of the mainstream media, and those who control it, to create heroes and anti-heroes. In doing so, it examines the public's confidence in mainstream media. Andrew Harrison in his article "Can you trust the mainstream media?" (Harrison, The Guardian 6 August 2017) describes how confidence in the media "has taken a battering" in recent years. Can the mainstream media be trusted? Do they invent fake news? Is it the way the business industry operates? Are heroes and anti-heroes the same? The independent press is struggling against big corporations such as Google, Facebook and others. According to a survey carried out by communications agency Edelman, in their 2017 Trust Barometer survey of 1,500 Britons, the number of people who said they trusted British news outlets fell from an already low 36% in 2015 to a mere 24% by the beginning of 2017 (Edelman 2017). As explained by Harrison, there is general mistrust of the mainstream media by the public. Donald Trump and, to a lesser extent Jeremy Corbyn, have been portrayed by the media as anti-heroes, even though such a portrayal may not be justified.

Consequently, as explained by Azeem Ibrahim in The Rohingyas: Inside Myanmar's Hidden Genocide, the de facto leader of Myanmar, Aung San Suu Kyi, who was hailed as a hero by writers such as Barbara Victor (Victor, 2002), who was endorsed by celebrities such as Bono and who won the Nobel Peace Prize, is currently responsible for the genocide of thousands of Muslim Rohingyas in the north of Myanmar (Azeem, 2016).

There are no parameters to control the digital army (fake profiles invented to influence public opinion in the world wide web) (Gragnani, 2017 BBC Brazil) or the digital zombie generation who do not have time to examine issues in depth, where a short headline is enough or even an image. If you are not able to read a website and all role information is not available, maybe you do not fit in the 'universe'. Sharing, likes, followers, retweets, subscribers (sources are proving Instagram, Snap Chat are increasing their users compared to Facebook). Information and entertainment are in conflict due to the fact that society is living in an era of lack of knowledge, however, we are still connected and no one can live without their social media network. The time when being accurate and educated is now gone. Someone else will discover for you and he/ she will be your hero; your role is only to see and share a post. Pass, next, swipe right or swipe left.

2.4 Monomyth theory by Joseph Campbell

The principles of Monomyth theory, which comes from the studies of Joseph Campbell, are well-known. These principles are summarised by the Hillsborough Community College academic research available online in the hyperlink (<https://www.hccfl.edu/media/724354/archetypesforliteraryanalysis.pdf>). As explained by the Hillsborough Community College research, Carl Jung (1875–1961) recognised that there were universal patterns in all stories and mythologies regardless of culture or historical period and hypothesised that part of the human mind contained a collective unconscious shared by all members of the human species; a sort of universal, primal memory. Joseph Campbell took Jung's ideas and applied them to world mythologies. In A Hero with a Thousand Faces, he refined the concept of hero and the hero's journey.

Recognising archetypal patterns in literature brings patterns we all unconsciously respond to in similar ways to a conscious level (Nelson, M. 2017).

2.4.1 “Archetypes” Classic Summary of Joseph Campbell used in Academic Investigation

The term archetype can be applied to:

- An image
- A theme
- A symbol
- An idea
- A character type
- A plot pattern

Archetypes can be expressed in

- Myths
- Dreams
- Literature
- Religions
- Fantasy
- Folklore

Heroic Archetypes:

- 1. Warrior (Odysseus): A near god-like hero faces physical challenges and external enemies
- 2. Lover (Prince Charming): A pure love motivates a hero to complete his quest
- 3. Scapegoat: Hero suffers for the sake of others
- 4. Transcendent Hero: The hero of tragedy whose fatal flaw brings about his downfall, but not without achieving some kind of transforming realisation or wisdom (Greek and Shakespearean tragedies—Oedipus, Hamlet, Macbeth, etc.)
- 5. Romantic/ Gothic Hero: Hero/ lover with a decidedly dark side (Mr. Rochester in Jane Eyre)
- 6. Proto-Feminist Hero: Female heroes (The Awakening by Kate Chopin)
- 7. Apocalyptic Hero: Hero who faces the possible destruction of society
- 8. Anti-Hero: A non-hero, given the vocation of failure, frequently humorous (Homer Simpson)
- 9. Defiant Anti-Hero: Opposer of society's definition of heroism/ goodness. (Heart of Darkness)
- 10. Unbalanced Hero: The Protagonist who has (or must pretend to have) mental or emotional deficiencies (Hamlet, One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest)
- 11. The Other – the Denied Hero: The protagonist whose status or essential otherness makes heroism possible (Invisible Man by Ralph Ellison, The Joy Luck Club by Amy Tan)
- 12. The Superhero: Exaggerates the normal proportions of humanity; frequently has divine or supernatural origins. In some sense, the superhero is one apart, someone who does not quite belong, but who is nonetheless needed by society. (Mythological heroes, Superman).

Types of Archetypal Journeys

1. The quest for identity
2. The epic journey to find the promised land/ to found the good city
3. The quest for vengeance
4. The warrior's journey to save his people
5. The search for love (to rescue the princess /damsel in distress)
6. The journey in search of knowledge
7. The tragic quest: penance or self-denial
8. The fool's errand
9. The quest to rid the land of danger
10. The grail quest (the quest for human perfection)

2.4.2 Stages of a Hero's Journey: Joseph Campbell's Monomyth from Hero with a Thousand Faces

Stage 1: Birth Fabulous circumstances surrounding conception, birth, and childhood establish the hero's pedigree and often constitute their own monomyth cycle.

Stage 2: Call The hero is called to adventure by some external event or messenger. They may accept the call willingly or reluctantly.

Stage 3: Help/ Amulet During the early stages of the journey, the hero will often receive aid from a protective, supernatural figure. The helper commonly gives the hero a protective amulet or weapon for the journey.

Stage 4: Threshold Upon reaching the threshold of adventure, the hero must undergo some sort of ordeal in order to pass from the everyday world into the world of adventure.

There is clear contrast between the familiar world of light and the dark, unknown world of adventure.

Stage 5: Tests The hero travels through the dream-like world of adventure where he must undergo a series of violent or psychological tests. Each successful test further proves the hero's ability and advances the journey.

Stage 6: Helpers The hero is often accompanied on the journey by a helper who assists in the series of tests and generally serves as a loyal companion. Alternately, the hero may encounter a supernatural helper in the world of adventure who fulfills this function.

Stage 7: Climax This is the critical moment in the hero's journey in which there is a supreme final battle that facilitates resolution of the adventure.

Stage 8: Flight After accomplishing the mission, the hero must return to the threshold of the adventure and prepare for a return to the everyday world.

Stage 9: Return The hero crosses the threshold of adventure and returns to the everyday world of daylight. This return usually takes the form of an awakening, rebirth, resurrection, or emergence from the wilderness.

Stage 10: Elixir The object, knowledge, or blessing that the hero acquired during the adventure is put to use in the everyday world.

Stage 11: Home The hero comes back from this mysterious adventure with the power to bestow boons on his fellow men.

Common Characteristics of a Hero's Journey

- The hero is naïve and inexperienced
- The hero meets monsters or monstrous men
- The hero has a strange, wise being as a mentor
- The hero yearns for the beautiful lady who is sometimes his guide or inspiration
- The hero must go on a journey, learn a lesson, change in some way, and return home
- The hero often crosses a body of water or travels on a bridge.
- The hero is born and raised in a rural setting away from cities
- The origin of the hero is mysterious or the hero loses his/ her parents at a young age, being raised by animals or a wise guardian
- The hero returns to the land of his/ her birth in disguise or as an unknown
- The hero is special, one of a kind. He/ she might represent a whole nation or culture
- The hero struggles for something valuable and important
- The hero has help from divine or supernatural forces
- The hero has a guide or guides
- The hero goes through a rite of passage or initiation, an event that marks a change from an immature to a more mature understanding of the world
- The hero undergoes some type of ritual or ceremony after his/ her initiation
- The hero has a loyal band of companions
- The hero makes a stirring speech to his/ her companions
- The hero engages in tests or contests of strength (physical and/ or mental) and shows pride in his/ her excellence
- The hero suffers an unhealable wound, sometimes an emotional or spiritual wound from which the hero never completely recovers.

2.5 Pillar of Collective Unconscious: C.G. Jung (1875-1961), Joseph Campbell (1904-1987) and J.R.R Tolkien (1892-1973)

As mentioned in the previous section, the common characteristics presented by heroes and villains, which are observed in multiple cultures and folk tales, were first identified by psychologist Carl Jung. He named such common characteristics “archetypes”. To Jung, those archetypes are part of the collective unconscious, which is a part of the human psyche where human beings have the same inherited elements as other human beings. According to Jung, archetypes can be located only through images or projections (Anslow, 2008). An archetype can also be described as the function or the role of an individual that is consistent throughout human history (Bratton, 2004).

As Bratton explains, there are many Jungian archetypes such as the self, the shadow, the anima, the animus, the persona and the hero. The self is related to what each person might consider to be his or her personality, but for Jung the self is the junction of the conscious and unconscious life of each individual. The shadow is related to the basic instincts and desires of human beings such as anger, lust and fear. The anima represents a feminine image in the male mind, while the animus represents the male image in the female mind. The persona represents the social masks people use in their daily life, such as a work mask and a family mask. The hero is related to the role of the “champion” in a story and is the character through which the audience experiences the action of the tale (Woolfe, 2013; Bratton, 2004).

As mentioned, Jung’s ideas influenced the work of mythologist Joseph Campbell. Campbell observed the fundamental aspects present in religions, myths and stories from around the globe, which would then originate the idea of the hero’s journey. To Campbell, the stories involving heroes shared a common structure known as the monomyth, which is the process that contains the common theme of separation – initiation – return, where the hero leaves the ordinary world and enters a special and dangerous world full of adventures, which is followed by a return to the ordinary world, but in an altered form (Randles, 2011; Woolfe, 2013). The hero's journey leads to positive changes in the life of the protagonist, which are achieved through his/ her growth and transformation (Randles, 2011; Bray, 2017).

The hero's journey usually revolves around an archetypal male or female character, who is presented with a complicated life event. The event presents a question that is answered through a long and arduous journey that is full of challenges. The hero must face such challenges in order to complete the journey and return to his or her place of origin. This structure, alongside Campbell's definition of the monomyth, have been very influential in the story of many movies and franchises such as Star Wars, Matrix and Disney films like Aladdin and The Lion King (Bray, 2017; Woolfe, 2013).

To Campbell, heroes are those that achieve success where others would fail and are also those that serve and benefit not only themselves, but their communities as well. Based on Campbell's ideas, we can observe many heroes and their journeys in the literature of writer J. R. R. Tolkien. In the Lord of the Rings series, characters such as Frodo, Aragorn and Sam can be seen as heroes, according to the conditions established by Campbell. Those three characters do things that others cannot and have served their communities. In the case of Frodo, his heroism is observed through his journey into Mount Doom in order to destroy the ring. By destroying the ring, he benefits his community and the entire world. Aragorn's heroism is observed when he goes through the Paths of the Dead, something no other mortal could do without Aragorn's help. He later becomes king and restores justice to his kingdom. Sam's heroism occurs when he successfully battles Shelob, becoming the first one to do so. He helps his own community, by restoring the shire, after its destruction by Saruman (Kesti, 2007).

2.6 Audience and the Reception Process through the Media

This thesis discusses the production of heroes by the factual and modern media. Authentic heroes, but also fictional ones, are invented by the media, as part of their reporting of current events and entertainment for the same audience reading a news item. When a member of the public reads a newspaper, they have contact with both 'real' and also some fictional heroes, which means, stories or content are placed side by side in the print paper narrative.

It is worth noting that this work touches on scientific literature, as well as fictional, to support an in-depth understanding in this academic work. This contributes to the contextualization and approach of the proposed theme.

2.6.1 'A tale never loses in the telling' and the "Just write what happened" Law of Journalism

The purpose of journalism is to produce and distribute content about the latest happenings. Journalism is an occupation; to be present, to use methods of gathering information, to ascertain, and also to use literary techniques. There are currently multichannel structures within this new era. The role of the public is becoming increasingly important and the dynamic of the audience has completely changed in the last few years. The public is now more involved in shaping society and reshaping opinions; it is more active, interactive/ participative and influences media habits. One example of this changing shift is the existence of citizen journalism, where everyone can publish their ideas to the world using social media. According to Ciancia & Mattei, (2018; chapter 7, Tell Me a Story, but It Should Be Real! p.104), this is happening through different channels to enhance the role of the audience (Jenkins, 2006; Pratten, 2015).

Thus, Jack Lule, former journalist, chair of the Department of Journalism and Communication at Lehigh University and author of the "Daily News, Eternal Stories," (<http://niemanreports.org/articles/journalism-and-myth/>), offers an interesting way of looking at the news by demonstrating that the stories that are reported in newspapers can be read as versions of the world's oldest myths. Lule states that "any attempt to address the crisis (in journalism) that does not recognize the mythological role of journalism is destined to fail."

Lule in his writing stresses the idea that the information model of journalism is bankrupt. "Newspeople think they are in the information business. But newspeople primarily are in the story business. And news will remain a subject of crisis as long as it strays from story." Therefore, he believes that "myths, of courses, are the universal, eternal stories". This, however, begs the question: How are they also journalism? In a similar manner, Lule remarks that: "Myths draw upon archetypal figures to offer exemplary models that represent shared values, confirm core beliefs, deny other beliefs, and help people engage with, appreciate, and understand the complex joys and sorrows of human life" (Woo 2001).

Lule also informs that not all stories are myths and sometimes the news is simply just the news, or as he makes a reference to Freud, sometimes a cigar is just a cigar. In this vein, this research relies on one primary question: "How will this myth's theory be reflected in the news product?" All theories connecting myth and journalism are important and interesting to increase understanding of the communication's path and evolution.

Lule explains the recipe about myths and journalism i.e. that there are not many stories, only the merest handful: the love story, the death story, the betrayal story, the redemption story, the triumph-over-adversity story. And which one, exactly, is the audience expecting to face?

Journalism is the power of truth, where there is only one law: "Just write what happened." As William Woo (2001), journalist and lecturer at Stanford University and reporter at the website Nieman Reports (<http://niemanreports.org/articles/journalism-and-myth/>), states: "The truth is the information in the story; it is not the story. It is the content, not the carton."

2.6.2 Media Coverage

As Werder (Werder 2002 p.231; Dardis 2006, p.412) mentions: "depending on the issue and the media's position toward it (...) the media themselves can promote different positions about the same issue".

The use of stories and storytelling has crept into many areas over the last decade, not only linked to the entertainment industry, but also to "real life", for example in marketing, advertising, and political communication, which will become journalism once there is a narrative as a news item. This is using journalism as a tool to achieve an audience that has not defined their perceptive of the true situation.

The result of this scenario is, and has been, the abuse and exploitation of these words, leading to conceptual confusion and fear of the storytelling practice and the truth of what journalism faces day by day. According to Christian Salmon (Salmon, 2010), the art of telling stories has been manipulated by politicians and marketers, becoming a scientific tool of persuasion and propaganda: A sort of shift from telling stories to telling tales.

Therefore, talking about myths within the journalism field, an area whose main moral obligation is the faithful reconstruction of reality and facts, seems ambiguous. Over the years, two positions have emerged from the ongoing debate: On the one hand, those practitioners who promote the idea of journalism as narration; and on the other hand, reporters who do not share the tendency to create stories.

A different study and important to highlight in this research come from Davide Pinardi (Pinardi, 2011), referred to the relationship between storytelling and journalism, stating that journalism is narration. Often, the problem is a misunderstanding. Pinardi criticises opinions and stresses that journalism IS narration. Making documentaries or taking pictures IS narration. This implies that the focus should change: Real-life stories should be honest and should not invent anything. People live in a society in which images are powerful: Images can be shown and edited in many different ways, bringing the narratee, the one who receives the narration, to read different realities (Cracco, Galli, & Pinardi, 2011, pp.26-27).

This idea was expanded upon by Luca Sofri, the director of the digital publisher ilPost.it, in his discussion regarding the use of storytelling within journalism. Sofri believes that the problem within journalism and myths is that the line between them is too close (Sofri, 2015). For example, when describing the expression "tell a story" in a blog post released in August 2015 (Sofri, 2015), he described how there are ambiguities inherent in the act of telling, and the act of building, a story. The problem within journalism, claims Sofri, is the disequilibrium that leads journalists into the ambiguous, grey areas. Two paths co-exist within journalism: The telling-tales path, which indicates if a news story is being novelized or subverted, and the storytelling path.

Additionally, Andrea Bettini, professional storyteller in his study Personal storytelling: Building effective self-narratives, he claims that in his point of view storytelling is a technique, and not something that can shape good or bad news, or a true or false presentation of facts. Bettini notes that in the journalistic field, storytelling allows both the author and the reader to reach aspects of the news that people cannot enjoy via traditional modes of consumption. Thus authors, and journalists, should never lose sight of the criteria and norms that outline their position toward an ethical discourse (Bettini A., Gavatorta F. 2016).

In conclusion, the most important concept to register is that journalists should not lose sight of the ethical aspects of narration in everyday practice. Undeniably, in the development and distribution of news there can be no confusion between reality and fiction.

Readers, users, followers, viewers, listeners, players and customers, are the audiences in today's world who must always be informed about the nature of what they are enjoying, so that they feel respected, thereby maintaining their loyalty.

As stated by M.L. Stein, Susan F. Paterno and R. Christopher Burnett (2006, p.101) in an introduction to journalism: "Perhaps the reporter's most difficult obligation is to remain neutral and objective despite her own biases. This is necessary for both the reporter's and the newspaper's credibility. Emotions may rage, but someone must remain above the battle to report events clearly and dispassionately. Advocates are a minority among readers, most of whom seek straight information, not partisan viewpoints. They want the facts presented fairly and accurately so they can make up their own minds".

The evidence strengthening this viewpoint is cited in the book Exploring Transmedia Journalism in the Digital Age (Gambarato, Rampazzo R, e et all. 2018), which suggests that it is necessary to rethink the workflow and reorganise the habits inside newsrooms. Media habits need to be recycled, updated and contemporised. There is a need for focusing on news gathering, the distribution process, and the economic issues according to specific aims and objectives.

Figure 1: Needs and strategic aims of a newsroom after the digital shift in Exploring Transmedia Journalism in the Digital Age (Gambarato, Rampazzo R, e et all. 2018).

As highlighted by James Curran (1990) “both state and media owners exercise a prerogative of direct and indirect control over media organisations”. Curran mentions also that there is a difference between broadcasting and print media. Print media is more independent because it does not require a government licence to set up. There are numerous examples of individuals who have tried to expose facts regarding how the media depicts major events in society.

In a further example of how the media can distort actual events, which ties in with the invention of heroes, Noelle-Neumann & Mathes (1987) refer to a study carried out in the United States which compared coverage of major issues such as crime, drug abuse, protests etc. with the realities of these issues and how the public perceived them. They concluded that Mass media depiction of major events had little if any relation to the problems in reality. Nevertheless, they found that the public’s perception of how important an issue was related to the amount of media coverage devoted to it.

2.6.3 Reception theory (Stuart Hall)

As George Orwell stated in his novel 1984: “In the face of pain there are no heroes” (Orwell, G. 2008, part 3, chapter 1).

In this section, reception theory will be discussed, which is a very important consideration in understanding the media’s invention of heroes. The audience interacts with media through what is referred to as reception theory. Using Stuart Hall’s encoding/ decoding theory, the ability of the mainstream media, and those who control it, to report events in society, such as the invention of heroes, is highlighted. In addition, relevant examples from countries around the world and current facts dealing with the public sphere, are discussed. Cross-national content analysis is also carried out to determine if the differing socio-political and cultural environments are reflected in each nation’s media production.

To define the significance of Stuart Hall’s encoding/ decoding reception theory, it is necessary to firstly understand the meaning of communication. The word communication stems from the Latin word, communis, which means common. As this definition implies, unless a common understanding results from exchange of information, there is no communication. Taking account of this information, and expanding this framework about the process of communication, leads to a discussion of the work of the cultural theorist Stuart Hall.

Stuart Hall came from a mixed-race family, which was the result of a colonial history. He was born in 1932 in Kingston, in the British colony of Jamaica. He was the blackest child of a middle-class family who secured for him an education, according to Andrew Roberts (2018; <http://studymore.org.uk/yhall.htm>) “Hall identified with the colour of his skin: The blackness was a reminder to him and everyone else that white slave owners had relations with black slaves somewhere in the history of his family. Stuart identified with the slaves, not with the slave owners,”. His upbringing allowed him to experience different cultural spaces (Davis, 2004). He later moved to England to study, where he remained to work.

Communication theory and cultural studies are deeply influenced by Stuart Hall. He was a political activist, a Marxist sociologist and a cultural theorist. Reception theory refers to how an audience interprets media (Ott & Mack, 2010). Hall published this model of communications theory based on subjective thoughts and emotions rather than on earlier purely stimulus-response ideas (Shaw, 2017).

When discussing the invention of the hero in modern myth making by the media, it is important to firstly note the epoch in which the events are taking place. Currently we are living in a twenty-first century society, based on a system of Capitalism as defined by Adam Smith (1723-1790) in his work An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations. When historical facts are revisited by the mass media, it leads to a greater degree of cultural reflexivity. Karl Marx (1818 - 1883) stated that history marked by the struggle between antagonistic classes influenced literature, art and education in classical book The Communist Manifesto. However, he also observed that ‘in every historical epoch the dominant ideas are those of the dominant class’. Although the media entertain many different viewpoints, “there is an overall political or economic context that the media will tend to promote over and above other contending views and social forces in society” (Barrat D, 1986).

To consider the importance of ideology and the public sphere, one must move beyond political matters to draw upon cultural studies, “with all those practices, institutions and systems of classifications through which there are inculcated in a population particular values, beliefs, competences, routines of life and habitual forms of conduct” (Bennett, 1998, p. 28)

In the context of media, this cultural dimension includes what Finkelman (2002, p. 15) called the “not inconsiderable symbolic representation of law, justice, and fairness”. Although concerned with power and inequality, cultural studies are opposed to economic reductionism, where all social phenomena are believed to have an economic explanation (Grossberg, 1984, p. 412). Therefore, it is sometimes dismissed as vague in its treatment of power, which is conceptualised in political-economic terms (e.g., Garnham, 1986, p. 500). In addition, the view that the mediated public sphere is an illusion which masks the hegemonic domination of the masses by the bourgeoisie is receiving considerable criticism (Curran, 1991; Garnham, 1986).

Hall's encoding/ decoding theory is based on a critical assessment of media depiction in society using social theory/ cultural reflexivity (Pels, D.2003). Reflexivity refers to (of a method or theory in the social sciences) taking account of the effect of the personality and culture or presence of the observer on what is being considered, and how that can influence the interpretation of the reception process. Reception theory states that meanings from contemporary media products can be processed both consciously and subconsciously (Ott and Mack, 2010).

Due to Hall's multi-racial background and his cultural experiences in Jamaica and in England, as already explained, he was very aware of class and race differences. The encoding/ decoding model recognises that media messages can be engineered to portray a particular meaning but also that audiences, depending on their culture, class and background, can interpret these messages in different ways (Ott and Mack, 2010). As Hall explains (Hall, 1980/ 1973), the process of communication can be thought of as linked moments: production, circulation, distribution/consumption, reproduction.

Ott and Mack further emphasise (Ott and Mack, 2010) that Hall focused his studies towards audience consumption, which refers to considering an audience as an active group of individuals rather than an undifferentiated 'mass'.

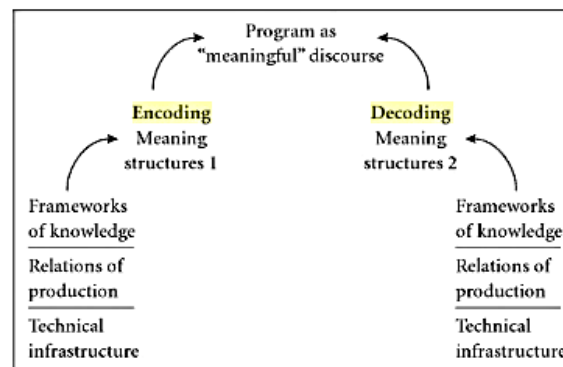

Hall developed his encoding/ decoding model based on the idea that meaning is the result of a communication process, whose stages he called 'moments'. The first stage is the 'moment of encoding', the second is the 'moment of the text' and finally, the third is the 'moment of decoding' (Hall, 1980/ 1973).

- Moment of encoding – this is the stage when the text is created. It is when structures, and coding conventions are used to create text with a specific meaning.
- Moment of the text – this is the stage when the symbolic existence of the text is published/ broadcast. It is in this moment that semiotics is focused.
- Moment of decoding – this is the stage when an individual with unique values and experiences comes across the text. This moment is regarded more as the stage of creation than the first stage.

Lucy Scott-Galloway (Galloway, 2018) notes that the reading of text is dependent on who the audience is, and what their social position is, because this influences their interpretation of denotative codes. However, the number of readings may not be infinite;

Hall suggested there are limits to the readings that can be made (Galloway, 2018). As already alluded to, the four steps involved in Hall's Encoding and Decoding model are: Production – Circulation – Use – Reproduction (Halls, 1980/ 1973).

2.5.4 Culture and Representation in Stuart Halls' Theory

In order to explore Stuart Hall's theory in greater detail, it is necessary to explain the terms culture and representation. As defined by the Merriam Webster dictionary, culture is "the customary beliefs, social forms, and material traits of a racial, religious, or social group"; it is "the characteristic features of everyday existence (such as diversions or a way of life) shared by people in a place or time" (Merriam-Webster, 2018).

To study culture, a central place needs to be given to representation, which is the production of meaning through language, discourse and image (Hall, 1997). Representation refers to how an object or concept is represented or produced in words or pictures in the mind of the listener. It is how ideas are communicated.

It is important to understand how representation connects meaning and language to culture (Hall, 1997). As Hall explains, there are three different theories about how language is used to describe the world: the reflective, the intentional and the constructionist approaches to representation (Hall, 1997).

According to the reflective approach, language is like a mirror that reflects the true meaning of an item as it exists in reality in the world. The intentional approach is the opposite, where the speaker fixes meaning onto the world through the use of his or her language. Words mean only what the speaker intends that they should mean. Finally, the constructionist (or constructivist) approach refers to how speakers impart meanings in their language based on their social and cultural systems (Hall, 1997).

In relation to Hall's theory, language can refer to spoken words, facial expressions, gestures, fashion, even music. In a linguistic sense, the same code (for example the English language) is shared among people of the same culture. As Hall explains, the fact that speakers and listeners are mutually intelligible is due to "a set of social conventions...cultural or linguistic relativism" (Hall, 1997, p. 8).

This is a very important point. There are two forms of the constructionist approach: the semiotic approach, spearheaded by Ferdinand de Saussure, and the discursive approach, influenced by Michel Foucault (Alcosta, 2012). Semiotics is a very significant concept in relation to contemporary media products. As Hall explains, "semiotics is the study of signs in culture, and of culture as a sort of 'language'" (Hall, 1997, p.20). Examining popular culture in a semiotic manner, activities can be interpreted as signs through which meaning is communicated (Hall, 1997).

This is meaningful in Hall's encoding/ decoding theory, where codes can be used to convey a descriptive level (denotation) and can be later decoded by the audience using conceptual signifiers (connotation) (Barthes, 1972). The media employ these concepts for example in advertisements and publicity campaigns (viral) to make products, actors, political candidates, proposals etc. appear more or less appealing to the public.

Hall believed that film represents a different reality, based upon the "mimetic theory of representation" (Hall 1988). According to this idea, not only can representations, such as film, mime or copy reality, they can also shape it. As Hall declares:

The conception from semiotic, discursive, sociological, feminist, art-historical and Foucauldian models of representation need to be observed.

Representation as a signifying practice is relevant in a rich diversity of social contexts such as:

- the use of photography in the construction of national identity and/or identification of one country and culture;
- the poetics and politics of exhibiting other cultures in ethnographic museums;
- fantasies of "the racialized other" in popular/ sensationalise media, film and image;
- the construction of masculine identities in discourses of consumer culture, advertising, publicity and/or any other product;
- the gendering of narratives in television soap operas.

As explained by Hall: "... events, relations, structures do have conditions of existence and real effects, outside the sphere of the discursive; but ... it is only within the discursive... [that they have] ... meaning. Thus, ... how things are represented ... [plays] ... a constitutive, and not merely a reflexive, after-the-event, role. This gives questions of culture and ideology, and the scenarios of representation - subjectivity, identity, politics - a formative, not merely an expressive, place in the constitution of social and political life." (Hall 1988).

2.7 Meaning and Language and Semiotic

This section further expands on the topic of language and culture that was discussed in the previous section. This thesis is based on the study of six news vehicles: three broadsheet newspapers and three tabloids. These newspapers and tabloids are from three countries: USA, Brazil and Ireland. This means that the empirical research was carried in two languages: English and Portuguese.

The fact that English is a universal language is almost a mantra. According to The Max Planck Institute for Psycholinguistics (<http://www.mpi.nl/q-a/questions-and-answers/why-is-english-the-universal-language>) "English is perceived by many people as the universal language because of the former influence of the British Empire and the current influence of American political and economic hegemony."

In order to provide contextualization to this research is important to discuss the language used in its sources. These languages are English and Portuguese. According to Simons, Gary F. and Charles D. Fennig (2018) in the website Ethnologue (<https://www.ethnologue.com/statistics/size>), English is third most spoken language and Portuguese is in seventh position.

According to Niall McCarthy, contributor reporter with Forbes in his article How Languages Used Online Compare To Real Life (2018) (<https://www.forbes.com/sites/niallmccarthy/2018/07/27/how-languages-used-online-compare-to-real-life-infographic/#7d273ff62c7c>), “language barriers have always proven a major hurdle for global connectivity”. McCarthy also notes that “while Chinese (and all of its varieties such as Mandarin and Wu) is the most spoken language globally with approximately 1.28 billion native speakers (roughly 16 percent of the planet's population) according to Ethnologue, the web is dominated by another language, English”.

2.7.1 Meaning of the Word ‘Hero’

As this thesis studies the invention of the hero, it is important to correctly understand the meaning of the term hero. As explained on the grammarist website, although heroine is traditionally the feminine equivalent of hero, hero is now a gender-neutral term for a person who acts with extraordinary courage (grammarist.com).

This thesis examined the term hero or 'hero / heroine', in both languages of the countries studied. It is clear to see that the way in which the term is used changes culturally and that it is important to understand language and the way it is being distilled and narrated in the respective newspapers studied.

Another important term to consider is that of “cult hero”. A cult hero refers to a type of hero that is meaningful to a niche group of people. Such heroes can be considerably influential despite their limited appeal or their possible lack of true hero characteristics.

2.8 News Values

As explained by John Hartley in Understanding News (Hartley, 1982), a widely cited study was carried out by Galtung and Ruge (1973) into the factors that make a story newsworthy. These general news values determine the kind of story, to which the media will give attention and also the priority that the story will be given in their news-selection. A prime example of an event that was deemed to be newsworthy by five of the six newspapers studied in this thesis, because it fulfilled most of the criteria below, was that of the saving of a 4-year old boy in Paris by Mamoudou Gassama, a migrant from Mali. Gassama, an ordinary person, climbed up four balconies of a building to save a child who was suspended from a balcony. He was hailed as a hero on 29th and 30th May 2018 in The Irish Times, The Irish Daily Star, Folha de São Paulo and in Meia Hora (the American newspapers are discussed below. Details of all articles can be seen in the appendix of this thesis).

News values, that the media deliberately or unconsciously employ, are highlighted below, where the more of them that an event/ story matches, the more likely it is to be reported by the media. The criteria is discussed in relation to the example of the saving of a 4-year old boy in Paris by Mamoudou Gassama.

1. Frequency

This is the length of time that the event lasts. Short-term events such as murders are preferred over longer-term economic, cultural or social trends. The saving of the young boy by Mamoudou Gassama in Paris, as already discussed, for example, was carried out in a matter of minutes.

2. Threshold

The size of an event. If an event is below a threshold it will not be reported (local and national news differs in its threshold). Referring again to the example of the saving of the young boy by Mamoudou Gassama in Paris, for example, this event reached an international audience.

3. Unambiguity

The clarity of an event. Events do not have to be simple but the range of possible meanings must be limited and simplified by the media. Mamoudou Gassama in Paris was invented as a French hero by the media. It is important to point out, however, that if he had not successfully saved the child the outcome would have been very different.

4. Meaningfulness

This news value consists of two parts:

- (a) Cultural proximity, where events that are more in tune with the cultural background, including social class, of the news-gatherers are more likely to be selected.
- (b) Relevance, where events will become newsworthy if they have an impact on the 'home' culture, especially in the form of a threat.

The story of Mamoudou Gassama in Paris was not deemed to be newsworthy in the National Enquirer and it appeared in the online edition only of The New York Times, possibly due to the fact that it was not immediately relevant to an American audience. This also reflects the sometimes insular nature of the American media, who perhaps were also worried about starting another debate on illegal immigrants.

5. Consonance

The predictability or desire for an event. If the public expect something to happen, then the media will be more likely to concentrate on it. This factor is known as consonance, which as Noelle-Neumann & Mathes (1987) state, means that if the media say something is going to happen then it will happen. It relates to news values that listeners come to expect and leads to stereotypical views and increased cultural reflexivity.

6. Unexpectedness

The unpredictability, or 'newness' of an event. This news value usually happens in a familiar context i.e. it must suit point 4 Meaningfulness and point 5 Consonance. Climbing a building to save a child is certainly unexpected.

7. Continuity

If an event is covered it will be continue to be covered for some time as a 'running story'. The story of Mamoudou Gassama in Paris was followed by the media for a number of days, for example. As reported in The Irish Times ("Malian who scaled building to rescue child will get French citizenship", Lara Marlowe, 28th May 2018):

"Until last weekend, Mamoudou Gassama was just one of the thousands of illegal migrants in northeast Paris. On Monday, the 22-year-old Malian was at the Élysée Palace to meet President Emmanuel Macron, who gave him a medal and promised him French nationality".

8. Composition

Balance is achieved by adding foreign news with domestic news, gloomy news with good news etc.

9. Reference to elite nations

If an event happens in a developed country, it is more likely to be reported. It is possible, for example that Mamoudou Gassama has previously saved children in his home country of Malia also but the stories of those events have not been deemed newsworthy in other countries.

10. Reference to elite persons

Famous and powerful people are seen to be more newsworthy than ordinary people.

11. Personalization

Events are viewed as the actions of individuals, rather than institutions, countries etc, as people are easier to identify with. For example, in The Irish Times article quoted above ("Malian who scaled building to rescue child will get French citizenship", Lara Marlowe, 28th May 2018), it was reported that President Emmanuel Macron promised Mamoudou Gassama citizenship, as opposed to the French government promising him citizenship.

12. Negativity

Bad news is good for the media. Nevertheless, its threshold is much lower than for good news. If Mamoudou Gassama had tragically dropped the child he was rescuing, the story may have reached the national and international newspapers but it would likely not have received as much publicity.

2.9 Freedom of expression is a universal human right

This section discusses the fact that freedom of expression is a universal human right and is not just the privilege of journalists. Citing Freedom House, which is an independent watchdog organization dedicated to the expansion of freedom and democracy around the world, freedom of expression is the right of every individual to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media regardless of frontiers, as defined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

2.9.1 Society Talks: The Public Sphere

Another important topic to take into account when discussing the Invention of the Hero in Modern Myth Making is what is known as the public sphere.

“Development of the public sphere required the breakdown of norms of secrecy and privilege”. Paul Starr (2004, p. 24)

In ancient Greece, the assembly area where male citizens gathered to discuss and exchange opinions was known as the agora. It was here that public expression was formed and could then influence government decisions. In the modern world, the agora is a local and global communication network called the public sphere, and the media is the main driver of this network.

The first use of the term public sphere was by Jürgen Habermas, where he defined it as the process by which citizens, civil society and the state communicate with each other, “especially on issues of political concern” (Dahlgren 2002). The public sphere sits between the state and society and its cultivation of public opinion is used to influence and shape government policies. In the public sphere, the strength of the argument is important, not the status of the speaker.

According to Habermas, the public sphere is essential to democracy. “How the public sphere is constituted and how it operates largely defines the structure and dynamics of any given polity,” writes theorist Manuel Castells (2008).

In this vein, it is realised that until citizens become conscious they will never rebel, and until after they have rebelled they cannot become conscious (Orwell, G. 2008, chapter 7). As George Orwell stated in his novel 1984:

“How could you tell how much of it was lies? It might be true that the average human being was better off now than he had been before the Revolution. The only evidence to the contrary was the mute protest in your own bones, the instinctive feeling that the conditions you lived in were intolerable and that at some other time they must have been different.” (Orwell, G. 2008, chapter 7).

Considering Frank Webster (2002), in his ‘Theories of the Information Society’, which provides an assessment of the variety of theories of information in society, in medieval feudalism “there existed a public representation of power. The status of the feudal lord...was oblivious to the categories ‘public’ and ‘private’, but the holder of the position represented it publicly: he showed himself, presented himself as the embodiment of an ever present ‘higher’ power.”

Figure 05: The information society reader ‘Jurgen Habermas, “The Public Sphere” - 4 The public sphere in the social welfare state mass democracy’, Webster F.; Blom R.; Part seven, chapter 23 (2004).

“The idea of the public sphere, preserved in the social welfare state mass democracy, an idea which calls for a rationalization of power through the medium of public discussion among private individuals, threatens to disintegrate with the structural transformation of the public sphere itself.”
Jurgen Habermas (Webster F., 1995)

Figure 06: The information society reader ‘Jurgen Habermas, “The Public Sphere” - 4 The public sphere in the social welfare state mass democracy’, Webster F.; Blom R.; Part seven, chapter 23.

This research considers the importance of ideology and the public sphere, where one must move beyond political matters to draw upon cultural studies, “with all those practices, institutions and systems of classifications through which there are inculcated in a population particular values, beliefs, competences, routines of life and habitual forms of conduct” (Bennett, 1998, p. 28).

In the context of press freedom, this cultural dimension includes what Finkelman (2002, p. 15) called the “not inconsiderable symbolic representation of law, justice, and fairness.” Although concerned with power and inequality, cultural studies are opposed to economic reductionism, where all social phenomena are believed to have an economic explanation (Grossberg, 1984, p. 412). Therefore, it is sometimes dismissed as vague in its treatment of power, which is conceptualised in political-economic terms (e.g., Garnham, 1986, p. 500). In addition, the view that the mediated public sphere is an illusion which masks the hegemonic domination of the masses by the bourgeoisie is receiving considerable criticism (Curran, 1991; Garnham, 1986).

“The bourgeois public sphere may be conceived above all as the sphere of private people (who have) come together as a public”, states Habermas, J. (1989: 28).

The actions of society are communicated through the public sphere and become relevant when the public has become fragmented, making collective action impossible or diversified. Diversity has the potential to subvert those ideological processes which construct the public as a mass to be governed. Bearing this viewpoint in mind, it should be asked whether the broadcast media, through access and participation programmes, are offering an institutional forum which orchestrates critical opinion, promoting or undermining the development of consensus between disinterested parties.

2.10 Broadsheet Papers and Tabloids

As Sterling explains, traditionally, tabloids are identified with populist, emotionally charged sensationalist journalism, while broadsheets are more sober, with a reputation for seriousness (Sterling, 2009). Historically, these two styles of newspaper were seen to appeal to different demographics, where broadsheet readers were viewed as more educated and sophisticated, while tabloids were more directed to the working class. Sterling clarifies, however, that "the tabloid-broadsheet distinction diminished by the start of the twenty-first century. Rising paper costs a shrinking audience, declining advertising revenues, and the general unwieldiness of the broadsheet format (especially for public transit commuters) resulted in many European newspapers shifting to a smaller, tabloid size" (Sterling, 2009, p.224).

The New York Times retained the broadsheet full-page set-up and an eight-column format for several years after most papers switched to six (https://www.nytimes.com/1976/06/15/archives/the-new-york-times-to-change-to-a-6column-format-sept-7.html). It was also one of the last newspapers to adopt colour photography, especially on its front page. (https://web.archive.org/web/20080918223325/http://www.nytco.com/company/milestones/timeline_1971.html). According to Henry Jarvis, co-founder of The New York Times: "We shall be Conservative, in all cases where we think Conservatism essential to the public good; — and we shall be Radical in everything which may seem to us to require radical treatment and radical reform" (Sherlock T. 2013).

Source: Mediabiasfactcheck.com, 2018 – Research Tabloid National Enquirer.

According to the Media Bias Fact Check website (<https://mediabiasfactcheck.com/national-enquirer>), the tabloid The National Enquirer is a right-wing newspaper. Media Bias notes that “The National Enquirer is an American supermarket tabloid published by American Media Inc (AMI) that was founded in 1926. The Enquirer openly acknowledges that it will pay sources for tips, a practice generally disapproved of by credible press. The current editor is Dylan Howard.” Media Bias also observes that, according to a report by The Associated Press, during the 2016 United States Presidential election, stories that supported Donald Trump and attacked his rivals bypassed the newspaper’s standard fact checking process and were published. In general, stories in The National Enquirer regarding politics have a right-wing bias in selection, especially when they relate to President Trump. Trump himself sent a tweet on 30th June 2017, as displayed below, that suggested his ties with the newspaper, when at this time other press outlets were questioning the situation.

2.11 Research Questions and Objectives

The overarching aim of this research project was to explore the connection between mythology and the evolution of the media communications used to create “monomyth” narratives. By conducting content analysis, it answered the following research questions:

1. Does the world currently need heroes?
2. How does the industry talk about heroes?
3. What does it take to be a hero?

4. Who is your hero?
5. What image of a hero do we create?
6. Can MSM (mainstream media) be trusted?
7. How does the media industry describe heroes?
8. What image of a hero does the media portray?
9. Do the results reflect the beliefs of the media and/ or current society?
10. What is journalism?
11. How are myths also journalism?
12. What influence does the media exert?
13. What exactly is meaning and how does the audience interpret received messages from the media?
14. Can technology empower an individual?
15. Who are the ones that receive global media attention?
16. Is there an example of the lack of balance in international news coverage?
17. Who led to an international media frenzy?
18. What kind of events receive little, if any, airtime or column inches?
19. How will myth theory be reflected in news products?
20. Do they invent fake news?
21. How does the business industry operate?
22. Are heroes and anti-heroes the same?

Chapter 3: Methodology

3.1 Introduction

Content analysis has become a central method in communication research according to Lacy et al. (2015). It is important to highlight the fundamental elements of content analysis, as captured in the definition presented by Riffe, Lacy, and Fico (2014):

“The systematic and replicable examination of symbols of communication, which have been assigned numeric values according to valid measurement rules, and the analysis of relationships involving those values using statistical methods, to describe the communication, draw inferences about its meaning, or infer from the communication to its context, both of production and consumption” (Riffe, Lacy, and Fico, 2014, p. 19).

This research used content analysis to study the Invention of the Hero in Modern Myth Making (In Times of Intolerance) in today's media. Techniques were employed to examine how the media use, describe and propagate the concept of the hero in the publishing of their articles. As the broadsheets and tabloids publishing the articles varied in terms of how they represented heroes, and hence in their potential impact on the audience, secondary analysis, including gender analysis, was also conducted which added weight for the period and historical timeframe to which each article related.

3.2 Outline and Framework of the Methodology

Content Analysis: How the media addresses the concept of the hero in their articles in broadsheet and tabloid newspapers.

Material: Broadsheets and Tabloids from three countries were examined:

USA: The New York Times; National Enquirer

BRAZIL: Folha de Sao Paulo; Meia Hora

IRELAND: The Irish Times; The Irish Daily Star

Period: 1st February 2018 to 31st May 2018. All print editions of the newspapers above within this four-month period (16 weeks) were examined. Therefore, the months studied were: February, March, April and May of 2018.

It was intended to analyse differences in how heroes are portrayed in newspapers in America, Brazil and Ireland, including a discussion of modern portrayals of heroes. Due to the fact that this research compared perspectives in different countries, it was necessary to use equivalent broadsheet and tabloid newspapers in each country selected.

There was the potential to find and compare heroes for the middle class and heroes for the working class, by analysing the broadsheets versus tabloids, which are aimed at different audiences. Extra discussions were also carried out based on the findings of the research, such as the day of week that the term hero occurred in the articles and the gender of the reported heroes (both fictional and real).

Categorisation 1: Hero, anti-hero, cult hero and fictional hero (superhero);

Categorisation 2: Headline, sub-headline, body text, image (available in the excel data table in the appendix).

Results: Excel table, graphics and text.

3.3 Content Analysis Process

To obtain the results from the American newspapers, this researcher acquired a subscription and access to the archive of all of the print editions of The New York Times, where a search was carried out for the term hero in the period under analysis. The same procedure was carried out for the National Enquirer tabloid i.e. newsgathering by subscription.

The results from the Brazilian newspapers were also collected using the newspapers' archives. As well as that, this researcher obtained the articles from the Lexis Nexis searchable database gateway, which is available to Masters students in Griffith College through Moodle.

In a likewise manner, relevant articles of The Irish Times were searched using the Lexis Nexis database. However, due to the fact the Irish Daily Star does not have a searchable online archive and they are also not available in Lexis Nexis, this researcher experienced great initial difficulty in accessing articles of the Irish Daily Star. Firstly, a manual search was carried out in the Ilac Centre Library, followed by visits to the National Library where Irish Daily Star articles are available on microfilm. However, access is limited to three microfilms at a time per person. Due to the length of manual effort and time involved, this approach would have affected the meeting of the strict deadline for this research work. Therefore, this researcher directly contacted the chief editor of The Irish Daily Star, Eoin Brannigan and received approval for exclusive access to their database. This reflected the hard work and perseverance of this researcher, who was immersed in this study. It is important to be clear that this action was due to merit, not good luck.

Newsgathering – Collected Data

After all of the newsgathering was completed, the next challenge in this research involved managing all of the articles and collating their details in an excel table (included in appendix).

The Irish Daily Star – Selected Data

The Irish tabloid demonstrated the largest result of matching articles, with an incredible 580 articles containing the word hero in the 4-month period under investigation. Due to this extremely large number, upon advice from the research's supervisor, a decision was taken to select a sample of 100 articles to frame how The Irish Daily Star talks about the hero.

From these 100 articles, 25 articles were chosen from each month inside the period that was being studied, in order to reflect a balanced distribution:

- (i) February: 25 articles
- (ii) March: 25 articles
- (iii) April: 25 articles
- (iv) May: 25 articles

Total Articles: 100 representing Irish Daily Star results.

This decision was made because this newspaper returned the largest quantity of articles featuring the word hero. However, upon checking, this researcher discovered that some of the articles were in fact duplicated articles, which were returned by ELVIS, the Irish Daily Star database which runs on Apple Macs machines.

This researcher found it challenging to gather the results and is very thankful to the professionals from The Irish Daily Star, who support news colleagues and students who are striving to do their best.

3.4 Analytical Categories

In order to collate the details of the hero articles found, the following categories of information were entered into an excel table, with regard to each article:

1. Newspaper: Name of the paper
2. Type of Newspaper: Broadsheet or tabloid
3. Country: USA, Brazil or Ireland
4. Headline: The headline of the article
5. Translation of headline: This category was used only for the Brazilian newspapers, due to this thesis being written in English.
6. Date: Date of the publication
7. Day: Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday
8. Section: Front Page; Second Page; World; Power/ Government; Opinion; Daily; Business; Opinion; Illustrated/ Culture; Be Aware; Sport; General; International; Style; Europe; Exclusive; Videos; The Ticket; Letters; Finance; Obituaries; Saturday Magazine; Features; Health; Ireland; Motors; No Section; Property; Lifestyle Fashion; Moira Hannon; Lifestyle Beauty; Lifestyle ShowBiz;
9. Page: Number of the page where article is found.
10. Hero's Name: What is the name of the hero being addressed.
11. Type of Hero: Who is this person in actual society.

12. General Type of Hero: Generalisation of the type of hero reported i.e. one of: Academic; Animal; Army; Business person; Celebrity; Criminal; Doctor; Fictional Hero/ Superhero/ Mythological Hero; Humanitarian; Journalist; Judge; Object; Ordinary Person; Police/ Firefighter; Politician; Religious; Revolutionary; Sportsperson; Other (i.e. star sign/ place).
13. Gender: Female; male; (animal; others). This categorisation expanded due to the fact that reported heroes were not only people, but extended to animals, places and objects.
14. Where the word hero is found: Headline; body text; both.
15. How many times used: How many times the term hero occurs in the article, 1, 2, 3 times etc.
16. Archive: Link to the article in the archive.
17. Hyperlink: The articles that were studied in this thesis were all from the printed version of newspapers. Online versions of the articles can differ in for example headlines, size of body text, name of section etc. To double check these differences, the online versions of some articles were also examined. To investigate this reality would involve future research.
18. Note: Observations in the articles or quotations that are worthy of display in the dissertation.

3.5 Ethical Issues

The study must adhere to Griffith College's Principles of Research Ethics, which relate to committing to the highest ethical standards. These ethical standards include the principles of data protection and ensuring that information is accurately and honestly acquired and displayed. Newsgathering requires accuracy, when reading, double checking and researching.

This research involved accessing newspaper databases, one of which this researcher was given special permission to access. It is essential to be responsible and respectful when in such cases, especially when interacting with private systems. To be granted access approval shows how important it is to have the research methodology clear and to know the direction of the study, the data that is being collected and the results that are required. Accuracy is important to improve and reach set goals.

Due to the fact that this research involved examining publicly available print newspaper articles, it did not touch upon major ethical issues. After all, newspaper articles are written to be read by the public.

3.6 Limitations and Challenges

As this was an original research topic, which involved collecting many published articles, it proved to be, at times, challenging. Potential challenges included:

- Griffith College provides access to research materials through Moodle at Online Resources and Databases – Media in Lexis Nexis News and Business. However, this database does not have access to all of the six broadsheets and tabloids included in this methodology. This factor affected the meeting of the strict deadlines in this work and it was a struggle to gather all of the results to achieve the methodology principles proposed.

- This researcher manually collected data at the Central Library in Ilac Centre, Henry Street, Dublin 1. This library provides hard copies of newspapers from the past six months and it is available to students. Searching manually was a very slow process, especially due to the 4-month (16 weeks i.e. 120 days) period involved. So to put together the results, this researcher took a big step in requesting database access.

With regard to the Brazilian newspapers, the published print articles were all digitally accessed. However, a difficulty lay in the fact that all articles had to be translated to English.

For all six newspapers, the following was carried out:

- Analysing of mythology and comparison to modern myth making.
- Investigation of the industry of making myths.
- Collection of data manually and digitally.
- Analysing of the content of the articles describing the hero to their audience.

Rich data was also obtained. However, the results to be achieved needed time and management in order to deliver content and results. In the next chapter, the results that came to light in this study are described.

Chapter 4: Analysis, Key Findings and Results

4.1 Introduction

This chapter describes the results, analysis and key findings of the research of this thesis whose title is “Invention of the Hero in Modern Myth Making in times of Intolerance”. It shows how the modern media is addressing and reporting the term ‘hero’ to current society and current events.

The sources for this research were established in three countries: USA, Brazil and Ireland. Two of these countries are in America, North and South. However, while the USA is a developed superpower country, Brazil is a developing country that is still dealing with a lot of societal issues. The last, but not less important, source country that was chosen for this research was Ireland, which represents the European continent. Ireland is known as a green country and together with USA it is a developed country.

In order to understand the invention of the hero by the modern media this work involved carrying out content analysis of the term ‘hero’ in broadsheets and tabloids from three countries: (i) USA: The New York Times, National Enquirer, (ii) Brazil: Folha de São Paulo, Meia Hora and (iii) IRELAND: The Irish Times, The Irish Daily Star. A four-month period of all print editions of the newspapers were studied, from 1st February 2018 to 31st May 2018.

4.2 Content Analysis, Key Findings and Initial Results

4.2.1 Initial Results

Over this 4-month period, this researcher found precisely 902 articles that contain the word 'hero', broken down as follows

(i) USA:

Broadsheet: The New York Times – 16 articles

Tabloid: National Enquirer – 22 articles

(ii) BRAZIL

Broadsheet: Folha de São Paulo – 63 articles from the archive and 76 from the Lexis Nexis

Tabloid: Meia Hora – 18 articles

(iii) IRELAND

Broadsheet: The Irish Times – 190 articles

Tabloid: The Irish Daily Star – 580 articles

Total Articles:  $16 + 22 + 76 + 18 + 190 + 580 = 902$

Broadsheets:  $16 + 76 + 190 = 282$

Tabloids:  $22 + 18 + 580 = 620$

4.2.2 Relevant and Final Results: Frequency of 'hero' in Articles

This researcher spent considerable time studying all of the articles above. It was found that some of the articles used the word 'hero' in circumstances not relevant to this research. These included a number of articles that used the term in a purely informational manner or as a term of praise. For example, in The New York Times front page article on Saturday 19th May 2018 entitled "What Was Gained in Gaza Protests? 'Zero. Less Than Zero'", the article quotes a statement from Zeid Ra'ad Al Hussein, the United Nations

High Commissioner for Human Rights, as saying "What do you become when you shoot to kill someone who is unarmed, and not an immediate threat to you? You are neither brave, nor a hero". In this case, the article refers to the word 'hero' in more of an allegorical<sup>1</sup> manner and does not refer to an actual hero, which led to the decision not to include it. In a number of other articles, it was found that the word 'hero' was used in a slightly misleading way that was also not relevant to this work. Examples include heroine (drug); lecherously; guitar hero; Hero World Challenge; Hero Indian Open and in song titles such as the "My Hero" song by The Foo Fighters and "Hero" by Mariah Carey.

After all this of this newsgathering and article-checking, the final list of relevant articles that were found, are shown below:

(iv) USA:

Broadsheet: The New York Times – 14 articles ↓

Tabloid: National Enquirer – 20 articles ↓

(v) BRAZIL

Broadsheet: Folha de São Paulo – 27 articles ↓

Tabloid: Meia Hora – 18 articles ☒

(vi) IRELAND

Broadsheet: The Irish Times – 160 articles ↓

Tabloid: The Irish Daily Star – *100 articles selected ↕↑

**Please see Chapter Three: Methodology for further details.*

Total Articles: 14 + 20 + 27 + 18 + 160 + 100 = 339

Broadsheets: 14 + 27+160 = 201

Tabloids: 20 + 18 + 100 = 138

---

<sup>1</sup> a story, play, poem, picture, text or other work in which the characters and events represent particular qualities or ideas that relate to morals, religion, or politics. Source: Cambridge Dictionary.

The results above of relevant articles where the word 'hero' is used are important because, as can be seen, broadsheets are reporting hero to society more frequently than tabloids. For clarity, these results are displayed in Figure 10:

However, as can be seen in Figure 10, in the USA, the tabloid National Enquirer (20 articles) reports 'hero' more frequently than the broadsheet New York Times (14 articles). Nevertheless, in Brazil and Ireland, the broadsheets Folha de Sao Paulo and The Irish Times classify more legends to current society.

4.3 Day of the Week When 'hero' is reported

Another important aspect to consider for this thesis was the day of the week that the term 'hero' was reported by the media to their audience. This information was determined during content analysis and is shown in Figure 11.

As can be seen in Figure 4, in the USA there is a balanced spread in the days of the week when hero is reported. There is slightly more frequency of the term at the weekend in the broadsheet The New York Times, while The National Enquirer peaks slightly on Tuesday and Wednesday. However, overall in the USA heroes are reported to society evenly throughout the week.

In Brazil, the broadsheet Folha de São Paulo and the tabloid Meia Hora were both found to use the term 'hero' more frequently at the weekend. The same was true in Ireland in the case of the broadsheet The Irish Times, where its hero content was found to be balanced during the week and it rose at the weekend, with 45 articles. Meanwhile, The Irish Daily Star was found to start the week with a high frequency of heroes, and reach its most frequent day on Friday.

It should be noted that the reason the weekend is highlighted, instead of Saturday and Sunday individually, is because the edition over the weekend in all countries is fuller of news items and more content.

For example, The Irish Times and The Irish Daily Star do not have Sunday editions. Offering a Saturday magazine allows the newspapers to provide their audience with enough content to get through the two days of the weekend.

The audience during the week is different to the audience at the weekend. As well as that, digital subscriptions are growing, which is a challenging market for the printed version of newspapers. Printed versions of newspapers typically have more advertisement space in them. In February 2018 Laura Slattery, in her article “The Irish Times had combined daily circulation of 77,988 in the second half of 2017”, notes that new figures from the Audit Bureau of Circulations (ABC) show that “growth in the audited digital edition (of The Irish Times) exceeded the loss of print sales. The year-on-year decline in combined sales narrowed to 2 per cent.” (<https://www.irishtimes.com/business/media-and-marketing/the-irish-times-had-combined-daily-circulation-of-77-988-in-second-half-of-20171.3402249>).

Reporting ‘hero’ is possible at the weekend because readers approach printed newspapers with a different frame of mind depending on the day of the week.

The media provides a more focused target towards advertising at the weekend. The media's mindset for weekday papers is more work-related and such content comes to the fore. By contrast on Sunday the emphasis is switched to 'me time', time to yourself and the reader has this time to consume the content prepared specifically for them. In a similar manner, Saturday papers provide readers with the opportunity to reflect and dig a little deeper into big issues, the content is larger and more flexible as well. This reality leads to advertisers taking the day of week into account, along with the content environment and the character of the newspaper. More variety of powerful choices can reach readers with a message that strikes a chord. Everything is influenced by the day and the edition of the newspaper. Weekend audiences are still a big presence in print newspaper media.

4.4 Gender of the Hero: Times up!

Another research question that this thesis, Invention of the Hero in Modern Myth Making, aimed to answer was: What image of a hero does the media portray? It offers an interesting insight into this matter. It effectively shows that the modern media has not evolved and the same patriarchal patterns are still prevalent in this ongoing ancient question about gender. The representation of heroic women in society is a minefield, a glass ceiling, that the modern media has not yet smashed.

The gender of the heroes, including fictional heroes, reported in each newspaper is shown in Figure 12. Also shown are the other types of heroes reported i.e. animal and object/others. This important data clearly highlights the narrative discourse of media reports.

Punch! Strikingly and remarkably, the results express that by far, the media talks more about male heroes. Extra! Extra! Men are more frequently reported as heroes to modern society. In Ireland, The Irish Times notches up 104 occurrences of heroic men compared to just 20 of heroic women, with surprisingly even more animals reported as heroes, at 32 occurrences. In a similar manner, in The Irish Daily Star there are 80 occurrences of men, 6 occurrences of woman and 8 occurrences of animal.

The media in Brazil and USA also classify men more commonly as heroes. In Folha de Sao Paulo, bingo! Men are reported as heroes 25 times while women just 4 times. Meia-Hora do not report any women as heroes and stick with men in all articles. In the land of Uncle Sam, the scenario is no different. The New York Times reports 11 men as hero, 2 women and 1 animal and 1 object/others. The tabloid National Enquirer reports 16 heroic men and just 4 heroic woman, giving a female percentage of 20%. Eureka.

4.5 Key Findings: Type of Hero

As has been seen in the previous two results, more reporting of 'hero' occurs at the weekend and the heroes are predominately men. It is important now know who are these heroes? Which type of hero does the modern media invent in its myth making narrative discourse through headlines, body text and images? These expectations are answered by this research and are displayed in Figure 6 – Type of Hero, where the type of hero and number of their reported occurrences are shown (some articles contain multiple hero occurrences).

This study discovered that the modern media makes heroes of a variety of subjects: academics; animals; army personnel such as soldiers and war veterans; business people; celebrities; doctors; fictional heroes from books, followed by superheroes from the big screen and mythological and historical icons.

An important point to make is that it was found in this study that anti-heroes, fallen heroes such as criminals and convicted citizens, were also classified as heroes by the media. In a court report from 14 May 2018 in The Irish Times (Sex abuser targeted girls 'neglected' by their mother, Isabel Hayes, 14 May 2018), for example, it is reported that "The older girl said the man came into her life at a time when she was extremely vulnerable. She said she thought he was her "hero" and then could not believe what he did to her".

It was found that the media also classify as heroes: humanitarians; journalists; judges, who form part of governments and have a role in keeping society safe, deciding what is wrong or against the law and ultimately lead to the organisation and unification of social groups, free from anarchy.

Additionally, and surprisingly, this research observed that the media at times also characterise objects as heroes, an indication of a capitalist consumption society. Also painted as heroes are ordinary people, which the readership can identify themselves with by means of a touching story related by the newspaper. Also represented are well-known heroes such as police, firefighters and paramedics. Controversially, politicians can also be heroes. Finally, this research also found that the media invent heroes of religious people, revolutionaries, sportspeople and a place or a star sign (which are classified in Figure 6 as “Other”).

Figure 13 shows that, when the results of all six newspapers are added together, sportspeople are, overall, the most commonly reported heroes. These sportspeople are mainly athletes, soccer players, rugby players, hurlers, managers and sports professionals. However, it is interesting to note that the broadsheets of America and Brazil, The New York Times and Folha de Sao Paulo, during the 4-month period studied did not classify any sportspeople as heroes.

The next most frequent type of hero classified in the six newspapers studied are animals. These are mainly reported in the Irish newspapers, The Irish Times and the Irish Daily Star and relate mainly to horse racing and dog racing. However, the National Enquirer also reported as a hero a dog in Arizona that saved another dog's life.

The next most common type of hero classified in the media studied was found to be celebrities. These include actors, singers, musicians, directors and personalities of the media, such as the Kardashians.

Fictional heroes, including superheroes and mythological heroes, are next in the list, which shows how fantasy is still a hugely important world to society. Too much truth can be hard. Controversially and provocatively, politicians are the next most common heroes, which includes, among others, Donald Trump and Melania Trump, Vladimir Putin, Michael D. Higgins, former President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva of Brazil and others.

Ordinary people are in sixth place in the overall list of reported heroes by the media in the six newspapers analysed in this study. These ordinary people are made up of the greatest kind of people in our society and include heroes such as Malian immigrant Mamoudou Gassama, who climbed up four balconies of a building to save a child who was suspended from a balcony, as explained further in Chapter Two.

Next in line in most frequent types of heroes reported by the media in this study are army heroes, followed by police/ firefighters, revolutionaries, business people, doctors, judges, academics, objects, journalists, criminals, other (i.e. star sign/ place) and, lastly, humanitarians and religious heroes.

Beautiful Day at Birkenau

Even then,
Surely even then,
There must have been
Days at Birkenau
As beautiful
As this.

And even then,
On such a day,
It was surely inevitable
That you
Could sense again,
Just for a moment,
The clemency
Of things.

Beyond the watch-tower
And the black-fanged fence
Clemency.
In the sunlit grass, in the sun
Hazy over a wood,
Its leaves
Painted that October red
You remember
From the Matisse print
Eva brought home
That time
From Paris.
Some clemency even
In the church spire that rises
Beyond the wood.

And when the vixen
Paused to scratch her ear
And met your eye
For a moment
Before loping away
Across the basking plain
After a hen or a hare,
You saw
The freedom
And the rightness
Of an animal's stride.

But then the daily
Anguish
Grips you again.
Here
Is no clemency.
No clemency
In humankind.

Sex, misogyny and murder in the city

CRIME FICTION

DECLAN HUGHES

Joseph Knox, Claire McGowan and Susie Steiner turn out strong works in their respective crime series

Joseph Knox's glittering, delicious noir debut, Sirens, introduced us to Manchester-based Detective Aidan Waits, a hard-boiled hero with a dark past, a dubious future and the sensibility of a doomed poet. The Smiling Man (Doubleday, £12.99) marks his return, and it is if anything an even better book. Condemned to working the seemingly endless, futile night shift alongside the grotesque DI Sutcliffe, Waits catches the case of a murdered stranger in the disused Palace Hotel. The eponymous victim's teeth and fingerprints have been replaced, and only a patch sewn into his trousers gives a clue to his identity. Meanwhile, the ghosts of Waits's past move from haunting to threatening, with a legacy of ultraviolence he has long tried to evade.

Although nominally a police procedural, The Smiling Man has the sense of place and vivid atmosphere of a classic PI novel. The city in high summer is invoked in almost hallucinatory intensity: "the beating motionless in the air, and the warmth still hummed underfoot. It had been baked down into the ground and into the buildings, charging the kerbs with kinetic energy." A suspect speaks briskly, "like a woman who'd lost interest in her own life ... she'd condensed three decades into as many sentences." Stylish, intelligent and full of heart, Joseph Knox is the best thing to have happened to English crime fiction in years.

The Killing House (Headline, £14.99) opens in 1993 with Margaret Maguire, mother of one, tied to a chair in a barn that stinks of boggy soil and septic tanks and cows; she's been lifted by an IRA punishment squad and her chief captor is not inclined towards mercy. Fast forward 21 years to the 10th floor of a London police station, and Margaret's daughter, forensic psychologist Paula Maguire, is still wondering if her mother escaped to London: "Not dead for 20 years in an unmarked grave, but alive and walking the same city streets her daughter had crossed a hundred times?" When the bodies of a man and a teenage girl are unearthed on the farm where her mother was held, Paula agrees to work the case at DI Helen Corry's request, but also in the hope that it might be connected to her mother's disappearance.

The Killing House is the sixth and final volume in Claire McGowan's terrifically well-sustained Paula Maguire series, and it shares all the virtues of the previous five: deft, subtle characterisation, elegant plotting, a nuanced eye for post-Troubles politics and, above all, Paula herself – witty, compassionate, insecure but nobody's fool. Warning: the closing pages are incredibly moving. This book will make you cry.

Susie Steiner's second Manon Bradshaw novel, Persons Unknown (Borough Press, £7.99) is an ingeniously and extravagantly plotted, multi-voiced thriller embracing police corruption, racial profiling, pregnancy, high-end prostitution, misogyny and murder in the City of London and the tangled knots of sisterly love. It is wise and witty about sex, romance, children and the promise of happiness.

It is also beautifully written, right from the bravura opening: "Down. Dizzy. Pitching left. He is draining away like dirty water. Stumbling not walking, the ground threatening to come up and meet him. And yet he presses on. Something's not right." Manon on reluctantly moving out of London: "I've got a group of nuns I feel comfortably ambivalent about, right here." A prostitute on her pimp: "Actually he was a nice guy. I mean not at a deep level – at a deep level he'd break both your legs. But to meet and chat to." The mother of a three-year-old: "F***ing love TV ... like taking their batteries out." And pregnant Manon, heart sore for her imprisoned son: "She finds it hard to remember the yearning she felt for her own biological child, like the missing square in a tile puzzle: the space that haunted the picture."

“A suspects speaks briskly, 'like a woman who'd lost interest in her own life ... she'd condensed three decades into as many sentences'”

Like a lethal weapon, a nicely judged twist can finish the job or it can backfire disastrously. For me, the final twist in Sarah Pinborough's best-selling last novel, Behind Her Eyes, fell into the latter category, although it should be said that I was decidedly in the minority (it even had its own hashtag #WTFthatending). I have no such reservations about Cross Her Heart (Harper Collins, £12.99), a masterclass in artful misdirection, where reality is an illusion and no one is as she seems. The narrative shifts between uptight mum Lisa, haunted by her violent ex and the death of a two-year-old boy, and daughter Ava, tight with her best girls, keen to lose her virginity to boyfriend Courtney and preoccupied with the older man she has met on Facebook, someone she can really talk to.

When Lisa's past emerges and Ava goes missing, the book graduates to a deeper and darker level: in particular, the backstory scenes of childhood squalor are brilliantly rendered and utterly harrowing. To say any more would be to give Pinborough's high stakes game away; suffice to say those twists keep coming, each one a perfectly controlled explosion, right to the mesmerising final pages.

In the opening pages of Louise Candlish's Our House (Simon and Schuster, £12.99) FI Lawson arrives home to find strangers moving into what the Daily Mail would probably call her £2 million London home. While she insists there must be some mistake, we soon learn the truth: FI's husband, Bram, sold the house six weeks previously, without her knowledge or consent. Bram takes up the tale from a hotel room in Geneva where, depressed and fretful, he fingers as the official catalyst for the entire disaster the moment FI discovered him having sex with a neighbour in the playhouse at the bottom of the garden. How Bram falls foul of the scam artists who blackmail him into selling the house from underneath his wife's feet drives the absorbing narrative. Candlish writes wittily and unsparingly about property and parenting, the household gods of the Mumsnet classes, and her study of feckless male self-destructiveness is acute and disturbing. The work finally turns in a superbly staged climax. Candlish's women may not be deadlier than the male, but they endure.

MUCH of the commentary following the acquittal of the four men in what has become known as the 'Belfast Rape Case' has been dripping with anti-man and definitely anti-due process.

Fundamentals have been set to one side in the pursuit of an overarching agenda which pushes the proposition that men — most men or all men — treat women despicably.

One of the fundamentals which — in all our interests — must not be sidelined, ignored, talked around or forgotten is that Paddy Jackson and Stuart Olding were found not guilty of rape.

Two others were found not guilty of lesser offences.

The four men had, throughout the trial, the presumption of innocence.

The jury was asked to believe that they committed a criminal offence — and the law requires that this belief must be beyond reasonable doubt.

The jury was unconvinced. And they acquitted. That's the way it should be.

But it is clear that many are outraged by the verdict. And that is truly scary.

They're saying they know more than a jury who listened to ALL the evidence, unedited by media; they know more than a jury that had the opportunity to see for themselves the witnesses give their evidence, allowing them to size up all aspects of the case, including credibility.

Satisfied

Many people would prefer to see these men convicted, even if the jury wasn't satisfied that the prosecution had proven their case.

That is mob rule. It's the setting aside of due process.

It's an option for no law at all.

There is no doubt that the rape trial process in the North needs radical overhaul.

Women who report rapes need all the support society can provide.

But that does not, and cannot, mean a lowering in the proof necessary to convict accused men.

One commentator advised women not to enter

Over 10,000 have no home on our watch

DISGUSTING excuse-making is always front and centre when the likes of Eoghan Murphy talks about the housing crisis.

Now, the laughingly entitled Housing Minister says they're into the first year of a five-year plan to solve the torture of nearly 10,000 people who have no roof over their heads.

The facts are horrible: at the end of February 1,739 families had no place to call their own — and this included 3,755 children.

Imagine that. On OUR watch — 96 years after we wrestled independence from the perfidious Albion.

The thing is scandalous. Shameful. That little children and their frantic parents are treated like this.

Free All because right-wing, free enterprise, hardline, capitalist ideology has been embraced by the Blueshirts — Fianna Fail and Labour before them. The market was chosen over common sense to manage the supply of housing.

Well — news-flash — the market f*cked up. Big time. Social housing needs to be adopted as best government policy, now and into the future.

It's the only way to solve the crisis — and the only way to make sure it never reoccurs.

4.7 Top Ten Heroes Reported by the Media

This thesis studied the invention of the hero in modern myth making in times of intolerance. The list below, in numerical order, shows the top ten heroes that were reported by the media as determined in this study. They are the ten subjects that were most frequently classified as heroes, reflecting the exposure given by the media in the three countries surveyed. The list was put together by adding the number of occurrences of these subjects as heroes in the articles. Their omnipresence in each article could also be seen i.e. their visibility over other heroes mentioned in the same article.

- 10) Black Panther – Fictional Hero (superhero)

Chapter 5: Conclusion and Recommendations

5.1 Introduction

This thesis studied the invention of the hero in modern myth making in times of intolerance. The work involved carrying out a search of six newspapers from three different countries over a four-month period for references of the word 'hero'. Relevant 'hero' articles were then examined and results were prepared of the types of hero reported in each, as well as the hero's gender and the day of the week that the hero reference was made. A broadsheet and a tabloid were examined in each country so that accurate comparisons could be made.

It was found that in each country, the term hero is assigned a different meaning by the media depending on the culture of the country. The reporting of the term 'hero' can therefore be graphically explained as a 'journalism traffic light', as shown in Figure 15. For Irish people, the term 'hero' forms part of daily reporting in both broadsheet and tabloid, while in the newspapers of Brazil and USA, the frequency of hero classifications is considerably lower.

Figure 15: Journalism traffic light, showing how the term 'hero' is assigned a different meaning in the media landscape studied in each country. Source: Jaqueline Costa Ribeiro, 2018.

In order to understand the factors underpinning these results, it is necessary to describe the road that the world is driving along at the moment. Shown below are some of the major global issues currently:

- Africa – Post-colonial inheritance
- Bees - Colony Collapse Disorder
- Brexit – United Kingdom
- CDO – Collateralized Debt Obligation
- China – Power economy
- Climate change
- Data Breach
- Deserts
- Digital army - shills (people paid to spread subversive messages online)
- Feminism
- Gene editing – modified babies
- Macron – France
- Merkel – Germany
- Mexican cartel and illegal immigration
- Nuclear energy
- Refugee crises
- Russian and U.S elections
- Trump era - fake news

The factors cited in this research aggregate value to the meaning of the results. The key finding is that the newspapers in the USA and Brazil are not reporting 'hero' as often as those of Ireland. This is likely a socio-cultural reflection on the country, where USA and Brazil are currently experiencing times of intolerance, while Ireland is a traditionally friendly country that is more open to hero classifications. Crucial to this discussion is the fact that the USA and Brazil are inside a political polarisation bubble in their respective societies, where there is an atmosphere bursting out, of hate and of love between many voters i.e. citizens. Figure 16 summarises the current political climate of each country.

In Power	Government	System	Reality
Donald Trump	Republican Party	American Democracy	Polarisation social event
Michel Temer	Brazilian Democratic Movement Party	Brazilian Democracy. However, Michel Temer was not elected by Brazilian voters. He took office on 31st August 2016 after the impeachment of his predecessor Dilma Rousseff.	Polarisation social event
Michael D. Higgins (President) Leo Varadkar (Taoiseach)	Independent Fine Gael	Irish Democracy Leo Varadkar took office after the former Taoiseach, Mr. Enda Kenny, resigned.	No major polarisation issues currently.

5.2 Research Questions Answered

To answer the research questions of this project, it is necessary to devote effort to time, understanding of context, analysis and discussion.

1. Does the world currently need heroes?

There has always been a need for classifying heroes in society, as their frequency in mythological stories highlights. The results of this research reveal that the media are continuing this pattern, where over the four-month period studied, 339 relevant articles were found in which heroes were classified by the media.

2. How does the industry talk about heroes?

The industry talks about heroes when it meets the need, a kind of law of supply and demand. As found in this study, the news industry predominantly describes male heroes in their weekend print newspapers. Many different types of heroes are classified, as the following list, in order of frequency, highlights: sportspersons, animals, celebrities, fictional heroes, politicians, ordinary people, army heroes, police/ firefighters, revolutionaries, business people, doctors, judges, academics, objects, journalists, criminals, other (i.e star sign/ place) and, lastly, humanitarians and religious heroes.

3. What does it take to be a hero?

Nowadays, the need for attention is an important consideration. As found in the 'hero' articles studied in this research, the media determines newsworthy stories based on news values such as frequency, threshold, unambiguity, meaningfulness, consonance, unexpectedness, continuity, composition, reference to elite nations, reference to elite persons, personalization and negativity. If an event distorts the attention of the public, society or interests of a certain number of people, private or otherwise, then the hero of the event is destined for publicity.

4. Who is your hero? Do you identify yourself with the hero?

To answer this question, it is appropriate to refer to a quotation from Fitzgerald and Spillman (1988:4): "But what about the things that really matter? What about the heart that aches and the memories that linger? The sleepless night and the rainy afternoons? What about Grandmother's stories and our own hopeless dreams? The ecstasy and the grim despair? Most of all, the sense of loss, and the betrayal of tribes. How often do we turn to the sports pages and read about our own injured and confirmation of our fragile identity, for a sense of mythic self? This is the abiding reality of football, the life beyond the transitory manufactured image".

The readership of media articles holds their own viewpoints on what constitutes a hero. Agreeing with the news item is an option. In today's connected world, the audience can search online for further details and viewpoints about the invented hero, which reduces the power of the media to invent their own heroes by a self-background.

5. What image of a hero do we create?

As drivers of the Public Sphere, the media reflects public expression. As this study highlights, the most common heroes in the media are sportspersons, politicians, police, war heroes, fictional heroes etc. It was found in this study that animals were more frequently classified as heroes (40 occurrences in all articles) than women (36 occurrences in all articles). This reflects the patriarchal nature of society in each of the three countries studied. The representation of heroic women in society is a glass ceiling, that the modern media has not yet smashed.

6. Can MSM (mainstream media) be trusted?

This study conveyed the political differences between the countries involved in this study i.e. Ireland, USA and Brazil. Currently in the USA and Brazil there is political polarisation. Therefore, depending on the political alignment of the newspaper involved, certain stories and heroes can be given more or less coverage.

7. How does the media industry describe heroes?

Through court reports, advertisements, articles; images, headlines, by-line, front-pages, social media, cross media, stories; gossip.

8. What image of a hero does the media portray?

As this study found, there is no limit. Any time, any day of the week a hero can be portrayed to society.

9. Do the results reflect the beliefs of the media and/ or current society?

Yes, all the reports are facts of truth, true events, daily reports and registers.

It was seen that sportspeople are the people most commonly classified as heroes and that members of religious orders were the joint least frequently reported heroes (with only one article in the Brazilian broadsheet Folha de São Paulo). This reflects the changing secular nature of society and it hints at the fact that Brazil is to some degree hanging onto its traditionally religious past, in contrast to Ireland and the USA.

The public is more interested in many male sports apparently and big sports business takes place in this arena. The media reflect this in their reporting, which leads to more male sportspersons being classified as heroes.

This research also found that, depending on the culture and history of the different countries studied, different heroes were classified. In Brazil (six occurrences in Folha de São Paulo) and USA (one occurrence in The New York Times), for example, a judge was characterised as a hero, whereas in Ireland there were no such cases. This is a reflection of the political polarisation, with judicial processes in Brazil and USA.

In a similar manner, it was seen that revolutionaries are a commonly classified hero type in Ireland (6 articles in The Irish Times), reflecting the history of the Republic of Ireland. Horses and dogs were also common heroes in Irish newspaper articles due to the popularity of horse racing and greyhound racing, while these animals only featured once outside of Ireland.

It is interesting to note that this study found that a number of different types of heroes are classified by broadsheets and by tabloids, which traditionally focus on different social classes of readers. In all of the broadsheets, for example (The Irish Times, The New York Times and Folha de São Paulo) occurrences of journalist heroes were found, whereas no journalist heroes were reported in any of the tabloid newspapers.

10. What is journalism?

Reporting of reality in true facts.

11. How are myths also journalism?

Journalism is also the business of stories.

12. What influence does the media exert?

Some heroes merit praise, such as ordinary people who carry out extraordinary tasks. The media carries out an honourable job in giving such heroes recognition in the Public Sphere. Invention of undeserving heroes by the media poses a danger, however. The media has an influence on everything that happens around the world.

13. What exactly is meaning and how does the audience interpret received messages from the media?

Meaning is essentially power. This study highlights the importance of Stuart Hall's encoding/ decoding reception theory when analysing the invention of the hero in modern myth making. Hall's theory states that texts such as newspaper articles are encoded by the media with values and messages, for example relating to invented heroes. The text is then decoded by the audience. Different readers decode the text in different ways, not always in the way the writer intended, depending on their culture and background. It is important to take account of the languages used in the articles studied i.e. English and Portuguese, two of the most widely spoken languages in the world. Within these languages, nuances are encountered depending on the culture of the country, which can lead readers to different perceptions of invented heroes.

14. Can technology empower an individual?

Yes, an opinionated and interactive audience is now prevalent in the world.

15. Who are the ones that receive global media attention?

Whoever is the subject of news agendas and government or society issues.

16. Is there an example of the lack of balance in international news coverage?

Yes, but this is a national characteristic. It depends on the country, due to the fact that newspapers are designed to reach their own audience. As well as that, each one has their own view, standards coverage and style house rules. For example, France, Germany and other powerful economies, elite nations, are given more visibility in news coverage. This relates to identifying the news items from these countries in international media.

17. Who led to an international media frenzy?

A common subject of media frenzy, as highlighted by the articles studied in this research, is Mr. Donald Trump.

18. What kind of events receive little, if any, airtime or column inches?

As explained in chapter two, this point refers to the meaningfulness news value, which relates to cultural proximity and relevance. For example, in relation to the event of Mamoudou Gassama, a migrant from Mali who rescued a child in Paris, the issue of illegal immigration became a story as well as his saving of the child.

However, what about the other illegal immigrants? Do they not deserve asylum?

Do they have to become heroes first?

19. How will myth theory be reflected in news products?

Through narrative discourse.

20. Do they invent fake news?

Yes, fake profiles or groups with cult-heroes are creating a digital army to spread ambiguous information.

21. How does the business industry operate?

By being optimist, ethical and taking risks. The industry is in crisis.

22. Are heroes and anti-heroes the same?

They can be, depending on how they are being reported.

5.3 Future Work and Conclusion

In relation to this work, there are some possibilities to continue this study into the future. It is a research work with a large amount of potential to be extended and expanded. It is an important topic for newsgathering and the globalisation landscape. Therefore, further research could be undertaken to identify and analyse other news item in this subject area.

Others avenues could also be developed, such as analysing more subtle search terms that the media use to characterise heroes, for example 'legendary', 'outstanding' etc.

Also, the work of individual journalists could be focused upon to see if certain individuals are more likely to use the term 'hero' due to daily habit or personal preference. The term 'hero' is particularly prevalent in Ireland in sport, whereas historically it may have been used only for e.g. war heroes in mythological stories such as Achilles. On the other hand, this study found that the word 'hero' was not used in reference to sportspersons in any articles in the Brazilian broadsheet Folha de São Paulo nor in the American broadsheet The New York Times during the four-month period of this study. Additionally, supplementary factors could be studied that would be helpful for the news industry to bear in mind when selecting the approach to this matter.

In conclusion to the Invention of the Hero in Modern Myth Making in Times of Intolerance, broadsheets and tabloids have different ways of imparting information to the public. Nevertheless, the role of journalism is still facing difficulties in the modern age keeping on the light of information. Like at a traffic light, switching direction in time. Watch this space.

3	On Wednesday, John J. Gotti, the grandson of the infamous Gambino family don who shares his name, was sentenced to five years in prison, following in the footsteps of two of his uncles, two great-uncles and both grandfathers. For three generations, members of the gangland dynasty have been imprisoned for crimes that have included shaking down construction sites, murdering a mob boss at a steakhouse and trying to extort the
4	"Peter Dalglish's arrest should be a 'teachable moment' for the humanitarian community to understand and recognize how predators exploit the cover of 'heroism' to commit crimes," Lori Handrahan, a veteran humanitarian worker, wrote in an essay published on Medium. "Let's be clear.
5	To the south, in Khan Younis, Palestinian journalists memorialized Yasser Murtaja, a colleague killed during the protests a week earlier. The Israeli military said he was an officer in the military wing of Hamas. But his image was plastered across posters and banners in the tent village, declaring

13	Hundreds of people, including Prime Minister Theresa May, attended the unveiling of the statue, which depicts Millicent Fawcett, a now relatively unsung hero of the feminist movement who led campaigning for women's right to vote. The bronze statue, which shows a middle-aged Ms. Fawcett
14	Maybe Melania Trump really is the hero of this particular story.
15	"When I sit in the taxi or bus I sometimes overhear common people saying they adore Trump, he at least honors his promises in campaign, they say," said Ali Sabzevari, a now-unemployed publisher. "Powerless people take resort to a hero, no matter who is the hero - Hitler or Trump, anyone

5	But Radar has previously reported, the actor, 64, has used his private planes to feed his bottomless lust for gay sex, including flying nearly a dozen male lovers on a transglobal orgy!
6	During the in-flight emergency, the NTSB report suggested John played the hero, transmitting a distress call just before the blackout.
7	MATTHEW MCCONAUGHEY'S HERO WAS HIMSELF? What did he win for? The cool Matthew McConaughey turned in some of his best work in Dallas Buyers Club, playing a real-life hustler-turned-AIDS activist upon contracting the disease. The actor was rewarded with the Best Actor Oscar in 2014. Why his speech was a head-scratcher: One thing about award seasons that might be tough. If you're the favorite and have been winning all the awards, by the time you get to the Oscars, you might run out of fresh ways to say thank you. Not McConaughey. In his narcissistic acceptance speech, the Texan drawled on more than he had previously and talked about how his hero at 15 was himself at 25. Huh? Definite Oscars speech fail.

10	In an exclusive interview with RadarOnline.com, the stunning-at-84 Newmar told all about the nightmare 3 a.m. call to 911 that brought real-life heroes to her home to save her from an acute myocardial infarction on April 21. "I was saved by two handsome paramedics who whisked me to St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, to be welcome by seven super-efficient nurses at 3 a.m, evidently a good time to show up," the blond beauty told Radar.
13	Norton and the other film's producers shared a statement following the tragedy, expressing their deepest condolences for Davidson's family. "New York City firefighters truly are the bravest in the world," the statement read. "We watched firsthand with astonishment as they charged into the smoke to make sure all were safely out and then fought to contain the blaze and prevent it from spreading, putting their lives on the line as they do every day. The FDNY are real life super-heroes and have our boundless admiration and gratitude."
14	In January 2016 convict Jared Fogle assaulted child-molestor inmate Steven Nigg. As a result of this, Fogle is being hailed as a "a sort-of folk hero" by victims of child abuse.

19	O.J. Simpson is a fallen hero. He was a successful American footballer, actor and broadcaster. However, in 1994 he was arrested and charged with the murders of his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ron Goldman but was later acquitted by a jury. Then in 2008 he was imprisoned for armed robbery and kidnapping. In this article it is reported that his friend Thomas Scotto claimed, just before he died, that Simpson confessed to him that he did in fact kill his ex-wife and her friend and also that his son Jason was at the crime scene when he did so.

Mr Poroshenko granted her their country's highest award, the "Hero of Ukraine" medal. Ms Savchenko has launched a hunger strike, as she did in Russia, saying she would "again show all the unbelievers. I will show the Ukrainian people what a hero is."

"You probably haven't heard of us because we have a marketing budget of zero," they said in a recent email. Head chef since August is Rachel Lynch, formerly the chef in Brother Hubbard. Before that, she cooked in The Pepper Pot at the Powerscourt Centre. She uses ingredients from here suppliers like McHally Family farms, Tardine sour dough and the Village Dairy for organic milk and cream.

A few years ago, the middle-class males of Hackney took, en masse, to growing beards and donning lumberjack shirts. The shirts have since fallen out of fashion, but the beards persist.

He should be ambiguous. He should offer guilty pleasures. The sexual aggression of Connery's Bond is now so offensive that any repetition would rightly render such a character unworkably malevolent. Bond has to be just sexist enough for us to savour disapproval, but not so openly misogynistic that we yearn to see Goldfinger's lush bifurcate his Walther. There is room for a clever scriptwriter to turn the current controversy to the franchise's advantage.

When a friendly stranger starts asking too many questions, Jule realises it's time to move on - but is it ever possible to outrun your past? The question is a pertinent one in relation to Genuine Fraud, the story of which unfolds in reverse, with each successive chap-ter taking us a step further into Jule's recent past via her turbulent relationship with the mysteriously disap-peared Imogen. Imogen's fate will come as no surprise to fans of Patricia Highsmith, especially as Lockhart specifically credits The Talented Mr Ripley as an influence, although in essentially rewriting crucial scenarios from that novel, Lockhart blurs the line between homage and pastiche. The antithesis of "the great white hetero action hero" she repeatedly mocks, Jule is no slouch herself when it comes to sickly dispatching anyone who threatens to stand in her way of self-gratification, a bad-ass anti-hero who believes her life cinematic. A nar-cisistic, manipulative and homicidal sociopath, Jule is a thrilling guilty pleasure, albeit one prone to needy self-aggrandising.

Siobhan Parkinson's short essays introduce a variety of well and lesser-known Irish women, from Queen Maeve to Mary Robinson. Laid out in chronological order, with short contextual panels, the subjects are as varied as the heroines, encompassing the world of sports and social justice, politics and theatre. Rocking the System illuminates the history of feminism in Ireland, but it also shows women as a match for men in various fields, from medicine to the material arts. It is essential reading for young history buffs.

(...) Churchill read up on Irish history to a greater extent than most of his contemporaries, but he also saw the Irish as a people who needed to be "managed" and dealt with "according to the consciences and conviction of the English people". As with so much of what he surveyed, he got some things spectacularly wrong about Ireland because of his blinkered imperialism; at the outset of the Irish War of independence in Febru-ary 1919 when he was the secretary for war, he asserted "there was no place in the world where there was less danger at the present time". Nonetheless, his contribution to wider history was such that he was a personal hero of former taoiseach Garret FitzGerald.

Sometimes there are knockbacks. Witness Budweiser's signing of Conor McGregor for its "Dream Big" ad, which was rejected by RTE and later banned by the Ad-vertising Standards Authority of Ireland on the basis that McGregor was a hero of the young. See also Dia-geo's experiments (since paused, after UK watchdog criticism) with Snapchat, the social media platform popular with under-18s.

The chicks threw themselves off the ledge in quick succession while a hero banker (it was 2008, when bankers needed good publicity) caught each one. Then the family marched off through the streets, with a police escort.

In the Mouth of the Wolf is the epic, true story of Michael Morpurgo's uncles during World War Two. The book will feature 100 pieces of artwork from Banoux, including illustrations inspired by Morpurgo's family photographs. It is an incredible true story of courage and love during World War II.

Like Gay, the former TV critic was unsure about the treatment of Roseanne's black granddaughter. "An innocent, young, African-American actor is hired - even if, in real life, Roseanne Barr is not above attacking children of Parkland," he writes. But that's not Barry in the scene. That's "Conner". Then, of course, there is the child of fluid gender definition who is also tolerated by the Conner family, revermed [sic] that their hero, Trump, keeps trying to kick transgender patriots out of the US military," he continues. But hang on another moment. Trump is not the hero of the "Conner family". He is a hero of Roseanne alone. The boy's mother, Darlene, is played by the eminently sensible Sara Gilbert. Why aren't we discussing her politics?

Superhero "I still remember that awful stomach tightness you get when you see something tragic happen. Shazzer was not supposed to be that guy, who all of a sudden acquires such a debilitating disability that he was no longer able to walk, run, play with his child and instead becomes a wheelchair user. What's that idea that players and athletes are superheroes. They can overcome anything at all." / Shazzer shows you there's football or any sport can do to you. But he proves my point about being a super-hero. He overcame everything and what a moment it was to see him work his way back to everything he once knew in his life before. / The only possible way that moment could be topped was if some other hero emerged from the darkness, like in a Marvel movie, and saved the day. Enter Shaquon Griffin.

He was there. What we know is that in the midst of the disaster he went back into the wreckage of the plane and rescued four people - Verena Lukic and her baby Vesna, and (ex)mates Bobby Charlton and Dennis Viollet. That's why he is the hero even if he doesn't want to be. That's why George Best wrote in the foreword to Harry's Game: "Harry, you're my hero and I mean that."

Surely this secrecy doesn't sit well with a president whose mandate was built on "a n i n c l u s i v e citizenship, equality and participation and respect". But no Glasnost? As the runners and riders line up for the next Presidential race, it's time to ask if we really need a full-time presidency — especially one with a €30m price tag and no accountability to the people.
